Sometimes we see an amazing Web site or software application and think that it must have been created by some software genius who's been chained to a computer since 6th grade. Well, that might have been true several years ago. Today, however, these whiz kids are still cranking out computer code, but doing it in a way that enables us regular folks to create technological magic.

In this meeting we will pull a rabbit out of a hat by using software tools to demonstrate how easy it is to create professional looking applications and products that enable educators to communicate and collaborate in ways that were not possible just a few years ago.

Faculty/Magicians

Eddie Davis, Ed.D., Senior Education Specialist, Center for Judicial Education and Research, San Francisco, CA.

Joseph Sawyer, Distance Learning and Technology Manager/Program Manager, National Judicial College, University of Reno, Reno, NV.
